
B.5.1 FEEDBACK AND COMPLAINTS

1.0. OVERVIEW

- 1.1. A “complaint” is when a person indicates that they have an issue with the quality or delivery of the service, made by person receiving services or an employee expressing grievance or concern for any reason and are seeking resolution. Complaints can be made in a number of ways including informally, in writing and verbally.
- 1.2. Each person has the right to complain about the quality of delivery of a service and have the opportunity to participate fully in the process of complaint resolution.
- 1.3. Service providers are expected to be person centred and innovative in their approaches to support and address the needs of each person making a complaint and comply with all relevant legislation. Service providers need to have the capacity and capability for complaint handling and provide information and support that takes into consideration the person’s individual and cultural needs.
- 1.4. Complaints play an essential role in identifying areas, which can lead to improved service performance to deliver positive outcomes for people with a disability, their families and carers. Service providers should use this information to inform service planning, identify areas for improvement and put in place strategies to address any areas requiring change at an individual or organisational level.
- 1.5. Feedback is different to complaints and is an important way for people to have a say about a service. Service providers should also have a feedback process in addition to their complaints policy, which encourages and welcomes comments, compliments or suggestions that can lead to ways of improving service delivery, systems or processes. In this way, service providers can build relationships and work with each person to identify and attempt to resolve any issue before it escalates.
- 1.6. Service providers are required under the National Disability Insurance Scheme Act 2013 to develop good complaint handling systems and deal with complaints fairly, objectively and as quickly as possible.
- 1.7. Service providers are also required to use processes that reflect the best interests of the person with a complaint and which support a person-centred approach.
